THIS MAN SHOULD BE TARRED AND FEATHERED

Travels Over County Slandering Court House Officials.

IS A NURSEY AGENT

Visits Farmers' Houses Spreading Poison Regarding Conduct of Our County Officers and Talks of Graft—Public Warned Against Him.

One of the meanest and most contemptible acts to come to our attention in many a day is that of a man who has been traveling over Centre County and asserting to farmers and others that the officials at the Court House here are a set of crooks and that graft is rampant in the conduct of the county's business. The author of these despicable slanders deserves a coat of tar and feathers.

Visiting the homes of several farmers at Pine Grove Mills in the capacity of an agent selling trees, the man in question made it a point to engage the women members of the family in conversation and finally brought up the subject of the work on the extension to the rear of the Court House. In the most reckless fashion he declared that there was not an honest official at the Court House, that the entire group were crooks and that the public would be amazed if it once became known how much graft existed.

The pity of it is that those to whom the man made the statemets did not kick him out of their homes.

"The Republican" gives publicity to the matter in order that the public may not be misled by the assertions of irresponsible persons. In the last few years it has become quite fashionable to charge graft at random and to view with suspicion the acts of men in public office. Sensation mongers have employed their arts to excite the public mind and direct suspicion toward the conduct of honest men. Few men in public life have escaped during this hysteria of suspicion. No matter how honest or how able they have been held up to suspicion.

It is so easy to cast reproach upon one's good name, but once done it is so much more difficult to undo the wrong. We need but to reflect a little to recall how many public officials have been accused or suspected of graft in recent years and how few there were, comparatively speaking, who proved to be dishonest or corrupt. In justice to those accused or suspected it is but fair to say that they were the victims of a condition created by reckless statements.

The present instance of casting supicion upon the acts of our Court House officials is in keeping with similar cases in other counties. If "The Republican" believed that any one of our county officials was corrupt or guilty of graft we would not hesitate a minute to denounce him regardless of what might be his political affiliation. We are just as ready to denounce the slanderer and fault-finder. We have no respect for those who spread false statements and do it in such a way as to hold themselves free from an accounting with the law.

There are Republican and Democratic officials at the Court House. We believe them to be thoroughly honest men. Thus far no act of theirs gives to any man the right to speak of dishonesty or graft. We repeat, the author of the malicious statements in question deserves to be publicly branded even though it would be a pity to waste the tar and the feathers.

Happily Married.

Last Thursday evening W. W. Allbright, of Spring Mills, with his fiance, Miss Emma E. Hoy, of Pine Hall, visited the Lutheran parsonage, where Rev. J. S. Shutts said the words that made their hearts beat as one. After congratulations the newly wedded couple returned to the bride's home, Mrs. G. W. Hoy, at Pine Hall, where a fine wedding supper awaited them. The bride is a splendid young woman and deserves a good husband and a good home. Mr. Allbright is a hustling young farmer and for a time will take charge of the Hoy farm.

MILLER—KANE.

A pretty wedding was that at the Catholic church at Howard, last Monday morning when Miss Catherine M. Kane became the wife of Henry J. Miller, the latter of Haskell, N. J. The ceremony was performed by Rev. Father O'Hanlon. Miss Marshall, of Lock Haven, played the wedding march.

NEWMAN—JARRETT.

Thomas Newman, of Philipsburg, and Miss Annie Jarrett, of One mile Run, were married on Monday evening, the ceremony being performed by 'Squire J. E. Hawkins, at Philipsburg.

SUNDAY MORNING FIRE

Flames Damage Apartments of Mrs. J. P. Gephart, on Allegheny St.

Fire, on Sunday morning last, damaged the apartments of Mrs. J. P. Gephart, at the home of Mrs. Hibler, on Allegheny street, to the extent of about $300. The loss is fully covered by insurance, although a number of paintings and other articles destroyed were priceless to Mrs. Gephart because of family associations.

Pretty much of Bellefonte was still in bed when the fire alarm sounded shortly before 8 o'clock in the morning. The big whistle sounded the alarm in a sleepy sort of way and many persons concluded that it was either a mistake or that the blaze had not amounted to much. For the most part they were surprised upon learning that the fire was so close to the big business blocks of the town and that had it not been discovered in time it might have developed a serious situation.

Harry Taylor, the Adams Express Company agent, happened to be walking along Allegheny street and when near Parrish's drug store he noticed smoke threading its way through the first floor windows of that side of the Hibler house adjoining the Montgomery home. It seems that Mrs. Hibler had already smelled the smoke and had been to the cellar to learn the cause. Mr. Taylor pounded on the front door of her home and when she responded he informed her that the house was on fire. Opening the door leading from the hall into the apartments of Mrs. Gephart they quickly discovered the location of the blaze. A cloud of smoke swept into their faces and for the moment it seemed as if the entire lower floor was in flames. Quickly closing the door to prevent the flames spreading, Mr. Taylor ran to the Logan Hose House, a short distance away. From the residence of H. P. Harris he telephoned to the electric light station to have the fire alarm sounded. Once the firemen were on the scene the fire was soon extinguished, but not before virtually everything in the front parlor and the front of the hall was destroyed, either by flames or water.

It appears that the fire was caused by sparks escaping from a cracked terra cotta pipe leading from the furnace directly underneath the parlor. The pipe was connected with an open fire place and it is supposed the sparks ignited articles lying nearby.

Social at Romola.

The home of Miss Edith Robb, at Romola, was the scene of a pretty function on Saturday evening in honor of Miss Adda Thompson, of Port Matilda. Quite a number of the young folks of the community were present and a most enjoyable time was had. The Robb home was beautifully decorated with greens and flowers and during the evening several musical selections were rendered by Miss Robb and Miss Pearl Brickley. About 10 o'clock all present were ushered into the spacious dining room where a splendid supper was served. Just before the stroke of midnight the guests departed for their respective homes. Miss Thompson is a popular and vivacious young woman and has been a guest of Miss Robb for several days.

Nearly Bit Off Tongue.

Alexander Gardner, who recently removed his family from Romola to Beech Creek, nearly bit off his tongue on Tuesday, the accident being quite an unusual one. He is employed in the mines of the Pennsylvania Fire Brick Company, and was loading a car with fire brick clay at the time. He was lifting a heavy piece into the car when a portion suddenly broke off. His one hand flew upward, striking him with considerable force on the chin. The blow caused his teeth to close on his tongue and with such force as to almost sever it.

Hospital Notes.

Discharged Mrs. Harry Fike, Mrs. Emma Bayletts, Andrew Sincoe, all of Bellefonte.

Miss Rebecca Rockey, Bellefonte, operation; condition satisfactory.

COMMERCIAL TEL. CO. UNDER NEW CONTROL

Is Part of American Union Sold to Continental Co. of N. Y.

INDEPENDENTS COMBINE

Centre County Shareholders of American Union to Receive $10 for Common and $20 for Preferred Stock—Deal Consummated in New York.

Centre County stockholders in the Commercial Telephone Company, which is a part of the American Union Telephone Company, were greatly interested in an announcement made in Harrisburg on Monday to the effect that the latter company had passed into the control of the Continental Telephone & Telegraph Company, of New York.

Judge Ellis L. Orvis recently resigned the presidency of the American Union, his action being but preliminary to the absorption of that company by the Continental. The deal was negotiated in New York.

It is understood that stockholders of the American Union Telephone Company, which owns the Commercial, will receive $10 a share for their common stock and $20 a share for the preferred stock.

The shares are to be paid for one year from date, without interest.

While stockholders are given until December 8 to agree to turn over their shares it is understood that the large holders, representing more than a majority of the stock, have already assented and that the deal is virtually closed.

The announcement of the sale of the American Union to the Continental was made in the following dispatch on Monday from Harrisburg:

Control of virtually all of the Independent telephone lines in Pennsylvania, outside of Philadelphia and Allegheny counties, has passed into the hands of the Continental Telephone and Telegraph Company, of New York, with the purchase of the American Union Telephone Company, which was announced at the headquarters of the American Union Company here today. The transactions were concluded in New York yesterday.

The American Union was formed for the purpose of continuing the independent lines in Pennsylvania, about two years ago. Its authorized capital is $25,000,000, of which there has been issued $2,900,000 of the preferred and $2,700,000 of common stock. It has $11,000,000 of bonds outstanding. The officers are: President, John Graham, of Newville, Pa.; vice-president, Charles West, of Harrisburg; secretary and treasurer, S. R. Caldwell, of Harrisburg.

The Continental Telephone and Telegraph Company controls independent lines in New York, New Jersey, Maryland, Delaware, Virginia and West Virginia. In addition to Pennsylvania lines acquired by the latest purchase, it recently took over the Interstate Telephone Company, of New Jersey.

Raised Flag Over School.

A short time ago the Henderson school purchased a fine flag and Thanksgiving was selected as an appropriate day to unfurl it to the breezes. Accordingly a large crowd of residents and friends of the school assembled at the schoolhouse and a delightful time was enjoyed by all. The P. O. S. of A of Martha, recently organized with a membership of about fifty, turned out with their music and flag and marched to the schoolhouse, where they were joined by the teacher, Miss Laura Bechdel, and her pupils. With six of the oldest pupils carrying the new flag the procession marched to the home of Bejamin Weaver, and returned about ten minutes later with a flagploe, presented by Andrew Weaver. The pole was quickly swung into place and "Old Glory" was raised forty-five feet into the air. To the strains of the "Star Spangled Banner" and amid the cheers of the large crowd, the flag was unfurled by Miss Bechdel. This part of the program concluded Rev. Harry McKelvey, pastor of the U. B. Church, delivered an appropriate address, followed by remarks by Benjamin Weaver and 'Squire Beckwith and a recitation by Sarah Newman, entitled "The Flower of Liberty." It was a "Red Letter Day" for the Henderson school.

"Call of The Wild."

Like old wine, a good actor will never lose his flavor with the public. In the above play the author has given him a part in which he will be able to display, at a good advantage, his ability as a star. At Garman's Opera House, Tuesday, Dec. 7.

CAPTURES $600 PRIZE

F. H. Streighthoff, Academy Instructor Wins Chicago Contest.

Dispatches from Chicago early in the week announced that Frank H. Streighthoff, an instructor at the Bellefonte Academy, has won a first prize of $600 in an essay contest there, participated in by college men from all over the country. The essays were on economic subjects, the prizes being awarded by Hart, Schaffner & Marx.

Accident to Automobilists.

John Leister and George Tate, of Reedsville, met with an automobile accident last Sunday while traveling to Jacksonville to see the latter's mother-in-law, Mrs. Joseph Hoy, who is seriously ill. While coming along the Bellefonte pike the automobile collided with a buggy in which were Miss Nellie Hall and Miss Lizzie Clark, of this place. Both automobile and buggy were badly wrecked. Leister and Tate continued on their way and the young women had to make the best of the situation. They telephoned to a Bellefonte liveryman and he went to their assistance. Leister and Tate managed to get as far as Coopertown, where they stopped at the home of J. A. Bartley and telephoned to Bellefonte for a machinist to repair their car. The liveryman collected the cost of repairing the buggy.

STUDENT DROPS DEAD AT STATE COLLEGE

Hugo Held, of Erie Dies in Presence of Room-mate.

AN INQUEST IS HELD

Coroner Huff Decides Young Man, Who was a Sophomore, Died of Acute Indigestion, Superinduced by Tuberculosis of Intestines.

A sudden and especially sad death was that at State College on Monday, when Hugo Held, of Erie, a member of the Sophomore class, was seized with acute indigestion and died in a few minutes. Held was about 19 years old and was popular with his fellow-students, among whom his death cast the greatest gloom.

An inquest into the cause of death, conducted by Coroner Huff, resulted in the decision that Held had suffered with acute indigestion, superinduced by an advanced case of tuberculosis of the intestines. When his death was first announced it created considerable stir among the students.

Held was working his way through college. As one of the waiters at McAllister Hall he attended to his duties on Monday morning and to all appearances was in good health. Returning to his room in the main college building, after breakfast, he complained to his roommate of not feeling well. A few minutes later he was found reeling in a dazed manner in the bathroom. Dashing cold water upon his face his room-mate succeeded in reviving Held and the latter returned to his room. While motioning to his room-mate to close a window Held toppled over and died a minute or two later.

Funeral services were held in the college chapel on Tuesday afternoon and were deeply impressive. The casket was covered with flowers and was draped with the flag of the class of 1912. The students were present in a body to pay their last tribute of respect. President Sparks, Dr. Gill and others made appropriate addresses, after which the body of Held was taken to his home at Erie for burial.

HELD FAMILY REUNION

Thirty Members of John Rockey Family Assemble for First Time.

An interesting event was that on last Friday at the home of W. H. Macker, the green grocer, when the first reunion of the John Rockey family was held. Mr. Rockey is a successful farmer at Fillmore, having resided there for the last thirty years. The reunion marked the first held where the family, including the several sons and daughters-in-law have been together. Thirty members of the family were present and were royally entertained by Mr. Macker. During the evening a fine oyster supper was served.

Those members of the family to come from a distance to attend the reunion included Frank Rockey, wife and children, of Altoona; Stewart Rockey, an employee of the Pennsylvania Railroad at Johnstown; Harvey Rockey, wife and children, of State College, and Mr. and Mrs. Andrew Rockey, of Hunter's Park. The children at home are Della, Edna, Henry and Elmer.

Mystery as to a Watch.

About a week ago, after being in the store of A. E. Moon in Blanchard, Morris Hubbard, of Beech Creek township, missed his watch, says the Lock Haven "Express." It was a solid gold watch and belonged to his father, the late Joseph W. Hubbard, ex-county commissioner, who had carried it 50 years before his death, when it descended to Morris his youngest son. Naturally the young man felt the loss keenly and was satisfied in his mind that some one among the large crowd in the store had picked it out of his pocket. He put the matter in the hands of Prof. M. F. Pletcher, justice of the peace, and William Coder, constable, of Liberty township. They began a quiet investigation and it seems were getting the matter sifted down pretty well when the watch turned up in a mysterious manner. A boy while in the store of Timothy McCarthy this borough, Friday last, espied a watch between several cases of soft drinks which were piled upon the floor. He picked up the watch in the presence of several persons and gave it to Mr. McCarthy. The latter, because he could gain no knowledge of any person having lost a watch, advertised it, requiring that the owner describe the watch. Mr. Hubbard soon heard of the advertisement and, calling upon Mr. McCarthy, described his watch and the one in Mr. McCarthy's possession proved to be Mr. Hubbard's. Mr. Hubbard was elated to recover possession of this heirloom. Mr. McCarthy says that previous to the finding of the watch, several men from Blanchard whose names were not known to him, were in his store, and the supposition is that the watch was dropped in an obscure place in order to get rid of it through fear of detection.

Centre County's Iron Output.

According to a statement issued at Harrisburg several days ago Centre county in 1908 produced 43,953 tons of iron, or 63 per cent. of the entire output in Pennsylvania for that year. Allegheny county, of course, heads the list, with 3,917,924 tons, or 56.181 per cent of the entire output in the State. Clearfield county ranks slightly above Centre, with an output of 55,306 tons. Centre county's output for 1910 will greatly exceed that of last year. Owing to the fact that the two big furnaces in Bellefonte were closed for such a long period the output for 1909 will be much below the estimated output for 1910.

POINTS FOR HUNTERS IN STATE BULLETIN

Department of Zoology Offers Numerous Suggestions.

TO PREVENT ACCIDENTS

Deems Matter of Sufficient Importance to Present Special Article Which Consists Chiefly of Series of "Don'ts" in Handling Guns.

The Zoological Bulletin of the Division of Zoology, of the Pennsylvania Department of Agriculture devotes space to the following article on "Safe Rules for Hunters":

In November, 1903, we published a number of rules to guide the amateur sportsman, and these received considerable comment. While a few persons regarded them as evidence that the writer was not a gunner, others rightly took them to be the results of experience. A careful study of the numerous gunning accidents in this State during the past six years has shown plainly that almost every accident, the details of which have been chronicled in the papers, was due to the failure to observe some one or more of these rules.

For the sake of the protection of life and property these are here published with the assurance that their observation will be liable to prevent accidents and save life and property. Those who are interested should make a comparative study of these rules and the causes of accidents published in the papers during the week they are received by the readers. They can then learn for themselves that most accidents are due to failure to heed the following directions:

As this is the hunting season a few rules may save very serious trouble, accidents, litigation, and loss of life. There are sure to be many persons shot accidentally this month. This need not happen if all would bear in mind the following rules:

1. Always keep the gun pointed from yourself and other persons.

2. Carry a gun with the end pointed either upward towards the sky or downward, toward the ground. Never sweep the horizon with it. If accidentally discharged while in the former position no harm is likely to result, but if discharged while held horizontally it may result seriously.

3. In getting over logs or fences always see that the gun is first put over and in a solid position where it will not fall. Then go to another place to climb over, and pick up the weapon with the end pointing where it should be.

4. Never pull or draw a gun toward yourself by the muzzle, especially in wagons, boats, over fences, logs, etc.

5. Do not load the gun until after leaving the house, and draw the loads (or remove the caps, if a muzzle loader, and watch that no percussion is left on the tube) as soon as leaving the hunting grounds.

6. Never keep a loaded gun around the house or tent, and do not leave a loaded weapon where it may be knocked down by dogs or children.

7. Do not carry the gun cocked except when alert for the game to raise.

8. Do not shoot into moving bushes or in the direction of a noise without being sure the desired game is there and seeing it for a certainty. The movement or noise may be caused by some person or by domesticated stock.

9. Watch the muzzle of the gun that no mud, snow, or other material fill it; and do not load as heavily with white or nitro powder as with black powder. This may prevent accidents from bursting.

10. Do not start a fire in the woods without first providing against its spreading, and do not leave it burning under any circumstances.

11. Do not wound game and leave it to suffer and die of its injuries. Better to spend an hour searching for a winged bird than to let it remain and suffer for a day or two before relieved by a merciful death.

12. Do not shoot protected birds or animals. There is a reason for protecting them. Find what it is and you will agree that the law is generally correct in giving them a protective season.

13. If you are going for fun only it is all right to take inexperienced friends, a well-filled lunch basket, literature and a target, and go to the nearest grove.

14. If going for game go alone or with experienced hunters only, carry only what is essential. Hunt with the back to the sun, slowly and quietly, and in such places and at such times of day as experience has taught that the particular kind of game sought is to be found.

15. Do not hunt for "anything." This generally results in nothing. Different kinds of game are to be found in different places and at varying times of day, according to the species sought. Decide before starting out as to the kind of game to be hunted and the region to be visited.

16. Ascertain if farms or premises are "posted" or hunting is forbidden, and keep out of trouble by either avoiding them or by asking the owners for permission to hunt on those portions where no to damage the live-stock may result.

17. If fences are knocked down in climbing over them take time to fix them up properly. Leave gates and bars just as they were found. If open, leave them so, as that is evidently what the owner wants, but if closed be sure to close and fasten them as before.

18. Be satisfied with a fair share of game, and do not try to exceed the legal limit or to kill all that may be found just because it may be there.

Only citizens of Pennsylvania are permitted to hunt in this State without a hunting license. Non-residents must pay a license fee of ten dollars per season for the privilege of hunting or even carrying "a gun in the fields or in the forests or upon the waters of this Commonwealth." Fine, twenty-five dollars or imprisonment. Unnaturalized foreigners are not permitted to carry fire-arms at anytime. Trespass consists in entering posted premises without consent of owner. Fine, ten dollars.

AGRICULTURAL CENSUS

Director Durant to Have Nine Million Copies Printed.

Census Director Durand has received from Assistant Director William F. Willoughby the general schedule for the census of agriculture, April 15th next, which Mr. Willoughby, in conjunction with Prof. Le Grand Powers, chief statistician for agriculture, and the advisory board of farm economists and other agricultural experts, has been formulating during the summer.

Director Durand has approved the form and subdivision of the inquiries and has ordered nine million copies of the schedule to be printed by the Goverment Printing Office in readiness before January 1st, although they will not be placed in the hands of the 45,000 farm enumerators until the usual time before the enumeration date. It is believed there are nearly seven million separate farms in the United States, each requiring a separate schedule.

MAKES GOOD, HEALTHY FLESH

C. M. Parrish Offers to Pay for Samose if it Fails.

Begin the use of Samose today, and you will soon notice a gain in good, healthy flesh. To all who are thin, weak and run down, this remarkable flesh-forming food promises plump, rosy perfect health, vigor and vitality.

Most people eat enough to become fat; the trouble is not lack of food, but lack of assimilative power.

Samose mingles with the food that is eaten, so that it is assimilated by the blood, and builds up pleasing plumpness and good health flesh. Those who use Samose for a week or ten days will soon notice a gain in weight and an improvement in general strength and health.

Put good, solid flesh on your bones, and you will be strong and well. In no other way can this be done than by the use of Samose. It gives plumpness and physical grace to the thin and scrawny, and will make you bright, rosy and normally fat.

Samose is in tablet form, pleasant to take, and is sold by one of the most reputable drug stores in Bellefonte, C. M. Parrish, under his personal guarantee to refund the money if it does not give satisfaction.

Baffled.

Two brothers were once at Count von Moltke's house at an evening party. Both were captains of the general staff. The general came up to a group of gentlemen, one of whom was one of the brothers. After joining in the conversation he said to the latter: "Just tell me who is that tall officer near the fireplace on the other side. I forget his name."

"That's my brother, your excellency," was the answer.

A smile stealing over the general's face suggested the idea that he had not obtained the information he wished. Some time after the general went to another group of people and there joined the officer whose name he had inquired. Suddenly the others saw him turning away, with the same smile on his face.

Afterward, when they inquired from the young officer what the general had asked him, he replied:

"He asked me who that officer was over there."

"And what did you say?"

"I said that he was my brother?"

The general gave up inquiring the name of the two brothers for that evening.

Cindy's Logic.

Cindy was an old black southern "mammy," with all the lovable traits and inconsistencies of her kind. For many years she was cook in the Warren family and gave faithful and satisfactory service.

One summer the entire family were away for two months, and Mr. Warren gave Cindy a real vacation by paying her full wages for that time and giving her the keys to the well stocked storeroom.

A few days after the return of the family Cindy came bristling into Mrs. Warren's sitting room.

"I wants mo' wages," she announced.

"Why, Cindy," exclaimed the surprised mistress, "you are getting better pay than any cook I know of in a family the size of ours. You have a nice, comfortable room and good treatment. Think how kind it was of Mr. Warren to give you a long vacation with your full wages."

"Dat's it," grumbled Cindy. "Mr. Warren paid me dat money fur doin' nuthin'. An' now all you folks is come back fur me to cook fur an' wait on. An' I gits more money or I leaves."—Lippincott's.

THE PRIME MINISTER.

A Foreign Sovereign Responsible For This English Official.

So long as the sovereign himself presided at the meetings of the cabinet there was no obvious necessity for giving any member of it precedence over the others. But from the accession of the house of Hanover, the king ceased to take part in the deliberations of the cabinet. It has been said, indeed, by a modern statesman that, "with a doubtful exception in the time of George III., no sovereign has been present at a meeting of the cabinet since Anne."

The change, like so many other modifications which have been introduced into the British constitution, was the result of a purely accidental circumstance. George I. could not speak the English language. It was clearly useless for a monarch to be present at the meetings of his councilors when he did not understand the language in which their deliberations were carried on. But when the sovereign was thus necessarily and habitually absent from the cabinet it became requisite that some minister should be chosen who should preside at the meetings and report its decisions to the king. Thus the accession of a foreigner who could not converse in English led to one of the most momentous changes in the constitution. The act of settlement had given England a foreign sovereign; the presence of a foreign sovereign gave England a prime minister.—From "Essays Political and Biographical," by Sir Spencer Walpole.

OBESITY CURED.

A Remedy That Is Not Liable to Attain Wide Popularity.

Peter the Great was once traveling incognito in a part of Finland, when he met a very fat man who told him that he was going to St. Petersburg.

"What for?" asked the czar.

"To consult a doctor about being so fat, which has become very oppressive."

"Do you know any doctor there?"

"No."

"Then I will give you a line to my friend, Prince Menschikoff, and he will introduce you to one of the emperor's physicians."

The traveler went to the prince's house with a note. The answer was not delayed. The next day, tied hands and feet, the poor man was dragged off on a cart to the mines.

Two years after Peter the Great was visiting the mines. He had forgotten the incident of the fat man, when suddenly a miner threw down his pick, rushed up to him and fell at his feet crying:

"Grace, grace, what is it I have done?"

Peter looked at him, astonished, until he remembered the story.

"Oh, so that is you!" he said. "I hope you are pleased with me. Stand up! How thin and slight you have become! Go, and remember that work is the best cure for your complaint!"

Bamboo Shoots as Food.

The bamboo shoots that are eaten are not yet branched, of a conical form and sheathed in an envelope generally covered by small, prickly bristles. These young shoots emerge very vigorously from the soil at the foot of the bamboo tufts. The Chinese and Japanese, it appears, consume large quantities of them. They use them as seasoning with pork and chicken. The first thing in their preparation naturally is to rid the sprouts of their disagreeable sheath. They are then cut either lengthwise or in slices and are placed in boiling water. The water is renewed once or twice, and after adding salt a vegetable is obtained which reminds one strongly of the root of the artichoke. The Japanese also eat them preserved in brine or vinegar. The gathering of the young bamboo shoots, during which one must be careful of the prickly envelope, takes place in June and November in Tonkin. The November shoots are the better appreciated.—New York Herald's Paris Edition.

Sawing Rails Is Not Musical.

Rails are cut with saws—not quietly; not at all. There is considerable racket underneath an elevated railroad in a narrow street, the subway isn't quite a lodge in some vast wilderness, but never until I watched a toothless saw cut through a cold steel rail by friction, melting its way—you can see the smeared ends afterward—did I experience a noise that my ear felt rather than heard, says Eugene Wood in Success Magazine. The toothless saw whirled with unimaginable speed, the sparks showered like an enormous pinwheel, and the unwilling steel emitted a shriek of agony that was like a forceful finger jammed into my ear and scratching on my eardrum with its nail. It was like a brass band of a hundred pieces, each piece blowing fortissimo, a note a half tone higher than its fellow. I don't care for such "close harmony."

On the Spot.

"Yes," said the Biliville story teller, "the cyclone carried his house into the next county and set it down there as comfortable as you please, and as he stepped out of the door to survey the country the man who owned the land notified him of suit for trespass and the tax collector handed him a bill for taxes."—Atlanta Constitution.

Theaters of Different Ages.

The difference between the playhouse in which we see a drama of Bronson Howard's today and the playhouse in which Sheridan's comedies were originally acted is greater than the difference between Sheridan's Drury Lane and the house for which Congreve wrote and in which Betterton acted. And that restoration playhouse was very unlike the Elizabethan theater for which Shakespeare wrote and in which Burbage acted. Even more apparent is the difference between the theater of Dionysius at Athens and the Roman theater at Orange. These theaters are sharply distinguished from one another by their size, by their shape, by their methods of illumination, by the absence or presence of real scenery and by the arrangement of the seats for the spectators, and as we study these successive changes we are confirmed in the conviction that these physical conditions must have exerted a powerful influence upon the dramatists who followed one another down the centuries.—Brander Matthews in Century.

Wisdom In Fable.

Among the best things that have ever been written are the Aesop's fables, which date back to the sixth century B. C. They present human nature as it always has been, is and probably always will be. Take, for example, the story of "The Fox Without a Tail:"

"A fox was once caught in a trap by his tail and in order to get free was obliged to leave it behind. He knew that his fellows would make fun of his tailless condition, so he made up his mind to induce them all to part with their tails. At the next assemblage of foxes he made a speech on the uselessness of tails in general and the inconvenience of a fox's tail in particular, declaring that never in his whole life had he felt so comfortable as now in his tailless freedom. When he sat down a sly old fox rose and, waving his brush, said, with a sneer, that if he had lost his tail he would be convinced by the last speaker's arguments, but until such an accident occurred he fully intended to vote in favor of tails."

Peculiar Superstitions.

The people of Kulu are extremely superstitious and go in extensively for demonolatry. Many trees are held to be sacred and have tiny temples dedicated to them. The demons are popularly supposed to live at the tops of trees, and if a tree falls in such a way that it is possible to pass under it, as is often the case on the mountain sides, every man before going beneath the trunk will place on it a stick or stone to propitiate its guardian spirit. Certain streams are also sacred, and no one is allowed to wash dirty clothes in them. One year some strangers came into the valley and happened to pollute the water of a river in this manner. It chanced to be a year of extraordinary rainfall, and the people implicitly believe that the excessive rain was sent by the outraged "deota" of the stream as punishment.—Wide World Magazine.

Helping Hubby Out.

"Your wife seems to be wonderfully interested in your business. Must be a source of great satisfaction to you."

"Yes, indeed. Do you know I used to think she cared nothing about it."

"Why the change?"

"I don't know. That's the funny part of it. I can't imagine what has changed her. A few nights ago I went home, tired most to death, and during the evening I casually remarked: 'Iole, my business is getting most too much for me to handle. I am thinking of employing a nice, steady stenographer and typewriter. Don't you think it would be a good idea?' From that moment the good little woman has been extremely anxious to assist me and make my lot easier in every way. I suppose it's her naturally sympathetic nature. It must be."—Boston Herald.

A Brilliant Judge.

Steady Baker was at one time mayor of Folkestone, England. Once a boy was brought before him for stealing gooseberries, and Steady, aware of the importance of the case, turned over the pages of the alphabetically arranged "Burn's Justice" for a precedent. Failing to find one, he turned to the culprit. "My lad," said he, "it's lucky for you that you were not brought here for stealing a goose instead of for stealing gooseberries. There is a statute against stealing geese, but I can't find anything about gooseberries in all 'Burn,' so let the prisoner be discharged, for I suppose it is no offense."

The Way Down.

They had been making hay while the sun shone, and when they had finished a high haystack the farmer's boy shouted from the top, "Say, mister, how am I goin' to get down?"

The farmer considered the problem and finally solved it:

"Oh, jest shet yer eyes an' walk round a bit!"—Everybody's.

Notwithstanding.

"Here, hold my horse a minute, will you?"

"Sir! I'm a member of congress."

"Never mind. You look honest. I'll take a chance."—Louisville Courier-Journal.

DOCTORS FAILED. RESTORED BY PERUNA.

Catarrh of the Lungs Threatened Her Life.

Miss Ninette Porter, Braintree, Vermont, writes: "I have been cured by Peruna.

"I had several hemorrhages of the lungs. The doctors did not help me much and would never have cured me.

"I saw a testimonial in a Peruna almanac of a case similar to mine, and I commenced using it.

"I was not able to wait on myself when I began using it. I gained very slowly at first, but I could see that it was helping me.

"After I had taken it a while I commenced to raise up a stringy, sticky substance from my lungs. This grew less and less in quantity as I continued the treatment.

"I grew more fleshy than I had been for a long time, and now I call myself well."

Sleep

Sleep is nature's rebuilding period, when the energy used by the brain, muscles and organs is renewed. If you lose sleep, your system is robbed of the strength sleep should give. Continued loss of sleep multiplies this loss until you become a physical wreck. Dr. Miles' Nervine quiets the irritated nerves and brings refreshing, invigorating sleep. Nervine contains no opiates, and therefor leaves no bad after-effects.

"For over two years I suffered untold agonies; my friends thought I was going crazy. I could not sleep nor rest at all. I tried different doctors, but failed to find relief. My head would ache all the time; I was like one drunk; could not concentrate my mind, and was so restless and worried that sleep was out of the question. After taking one bottle of Dr. Miles' Nervine I felt wonderfully changed. I am now on my third bottle and am gaining all the time. I can lie down and sleep like a child, and am able to do my work." VIII.—Dangers of the Elevated Nose

"BUT what's the matter with them, honey?" demanded the colonel. "Ain't they good people? Ain't they honest? Don't they behave themselves about as well as any of your friends? Don't they"—

"Yes, papa, yes!" interrupted his daughter. "They're very nice people, and I have no fault to find with them, but"— And Mrs. Rollins turned up her pretty little nose and gazed silently at the fire.

"Uh, huh!" grunted the colonel. "I understand. They just ain't in your class, accordin' to your way of lookin' at it. But, honey, I wouldn't twist my face up that way if I was you. It'll make wrinkles quicker than anything in the world, and the worst kind of wrinkles too. You know, there's wrinkles and wrinkles. Some wrinkles light up the plainest face with beauty. Yes, honey, that's a fact. And then there's some that make the most beautiful face look ugly. You're developin' some of that kind when you turn up your nose in that way. Uh, huh! I thought that'd make you drop it. And now you're makin' some of the kind that add to beauty—the wrinkles that come from smiles.

UGLY WRINKLES ON THE BRAIN.

"Yes, indeedy, my dear, the turned up nose is a dangerous thing. It not only makes ugly wrinkles on the face, but it makes ugly wrinkles on the brain. Never thought about that, did you? No, I reckon not, but it's true. I never saw a human brain, but they say it's all covered over with wrinkles, and the scientific fellows have a lot of theories about them. But I've got a notion that they're caused by the same thoughts and feelin's and emotions that put the lines on the countenance. Anyhow, if an elevated nose don't make its mark on the outside, of the brain it does on the inside, and it amounts to the same thing, for the movements of the face that go to make up what we call expression are nothin' more than the sign of the workin' of the mind. When you curl up your little proboscis, like you did a bit ago, that's a sign that you was thinkin' yourself a little better, maybe a whole lot better, than the people we was talkin' about.

"Now, honey, I want to tell you that that's a pretty risky attitude for anybody to take. I believe in a man thinkin' well of himself or a woman thinkin' well of herself, but when you begin to make comparisons between yourself and other folks to the disadvantage of the other folks you're gettin' on dangerous ground, for two reasons. In the first place, you're cultivatin' an opinion of yourself that ain't warranted by the facts. You're settin' yourself up on a pedestal that's full of cracks, and one of these fine days it'll crumble to pieces, and down you'll drop like a load of bricks, for whenever a man or a woman raises himself in his mind above his fellows he's gettin' ready for a fall. If he don't topple over of himself somebody will pull out the props from under him, and then the people he's been lookin' down on will look down on him and laugh—just laugh. That's the second reason why the turned up nose is bad business. It spoils you, and then it spoils your friends, for the habit of thought that expresses itself in the turned up nose is fatal to the kind of self esteem that everybody ought to have, and it's fatal to friendship.

A WRONG PERSPECTIVE.

"You see, honey, an elevated nose is a good deal like one of those old fashioned blunderbusses—it hits a whole lot of people that you didn't aim at, and whoever it hits it hurts. Nobody can tell where it's goin' to strike, and so they get in the habit of dodgin' whenever it comes around. There's a good many folks you can scold and abuse and they'll take it good natured and keep on being friends, but just let 'em get the notion that you're sneerin' at 'em and it's all off. Most all of us have an idea that we're about as good as the next one, and nothin' makes us madder than a turned up nose, and the greater the difference between us in wealth or social station the madder we get about it.

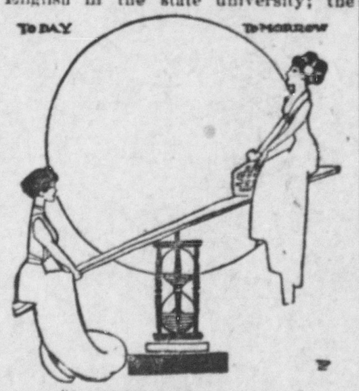
"If you're goin' to get the best there is out of the world and out of the people in it you've got to meet folks on the level. You go up to the top of a skyscraper buildin' and look out the window down at the men and women in the street below, and they all look mighty small—not more'n half as big as you are. But when you go down in the elevator and get out on the pavement you find they average up about the same size as yourself. It's all a matter of the point of view, and the turned up nose gives you a wrong perspective. It gives you false notions of your own importance and your own position, while everybody else can see that you're just one of the common run of folks and have no right to feel yourself any better than they are. And so you get out of touch and out of sympathy with the rest of the world around you, and then you begin to sour. That's just as certain as that

THE ONLY GOOD YARDSTICK.

God made little apples. A sneer in the brain is a sign of fermentation, and fermentation, you know, comes mighty close to bein' rotten.

"Now, then, gettin' right down to brass tacks, as the fellow says, the only reason you've got for elevatin' your nose at the people we was talkin' about is that they don't run in your set. Well, what if they don't? Is your set the standard by which all others have to be measured? I reckon not. It takes all kinds of people to make a world, as you've heard before, and some of the best ones in it make the least show.

"You can't tell by lookin' at the people you meet on the street how many of them's beneath you and how many's above you. You can't tell by lookin' at a woman's clothes or countin' the money she's got in the bank whether you've got a right to look down on her or she's got a right to look down on you. You can't tell by hearin' a woman quote Ibsen whether she's better or worse than you. It ain't money or clothes or blood or culture that counts when it comes to measurin' up men and women. The only yardstick that's good anywhere on earth and in any society is character. That's common, or uncommon, to rich and poor, and your washerwoman may have as much of it and be as much entitled to your respect as the president of your club. One of the two greatest men I ever had the honor to know was a professor of English in the state university; the other was a ditch digger who couldn't spell his own name.



"A MIGHTY WABBLY WORLD."

"But even when you size up people accordin' to the standard of your club it ain't safe to turn up your nose, for this is a mighty wabbly world, and the folks that's up today may be down tomorrow, and the ones that's down tomorrow may be up at the top of the heap next week. If you're goin' to judge people by that standard you've got no right to object if they measure you by the same rule, and it's mighty embarrassin', I imagine, to find the folks you've been turnin' up your nose at in a position to elevate their noses at you. But, say, little girl, it's bedtime, and here I've been fussin' and scoldin' the whole evenin'. Don't you feel bad about it, though, honey. Your old daddy thinks you're the finest ever, but he don't want you to find it out. Good night."

Brief Truths.

The married beauty always looks upon her husband as the beast.

No woman wants her offspring to pose as an object lesson at a mothers' meeting.

One of the things a man can't understand is why his enemies seem to have so many friends.

The smile of a good woman will do a man more good than a dozen handed to him by a bartender.

After a man has been married a year he can't see any reason why his wife should want a new hat.

It sometimes happens that a man is kept from buying mining stock because he hasn't got the ready cash.

Once in awhile a man is too proud to beg and too honest to steal. Then the only alternative he has left is to go to work.

Woman's World

CHILDREN'S ASTRONOMER.

Miss Mary Proctor Holds Small Folk Spellbound With Stories of Starland.

Miss Mary Proctor, daughter of the late Mr. Richard A. Proctor, the eminent astronomer, is herself known as the "popularizer of astronomy." She has given over a thousand lectures in this country and Canada, which she made attractive to the young and old, to children and adults, and specially succeeded in attracting children and in holding their attention spellbound while she told them in an easily understandable way of the wonders of starland or of the sun or the moon.

Miss Proctor was born in Ireland, but has made her home in America. Familiar from her early youth with astronomy through being an intelligent helper to her father, it never entered her mind to study this fascinating science with a view to imparting her knowledge to others. She began lecturing almost by an accident. When the World's fair was held in Chicago in 1893 Mrs. Potter Palmer published an article asking women to send her original ideas about entertaining children. Miss Proctor explained her idea about lectures which she proposed to give in the children building in the exhibition grounds and which should attract the children of America.

Mrs. Potter Palmer was delighted with this idea, and already at Miss Proctor's first lecture clever agents were quick in recognizing that a new star in the lecture world had arisen and were anxious to engage her for lecture tours. Visitors to the World's fair will remember that the children's building was crowded every time a lecture was given by Miss Proctor, and it did not matter if she took "the brownies up to the sky" or spoke pleasantly of the "wonders of starland," for she understood how to touch a responsive chord in her small listeners' imagination, and she had seldom, if ever, to complain of inattention in her youthful audiences.

Miss Proctor has also written two books for children which command a ready sale—"Stories of Starland" and "Giant Sun and His Family." It is small wonder, therefore, that she is called the "children's astronomer," for she has succeeded, where so many have failed, to come down from a lofty observatory to the children's intelligence and to take them up with her into the heavens, where a new world of wonders awaits the little people's pleasure.

Machine Hemstitching.

Few women seem to know that hemstitching can be done on the machine and done more evenly than any but an expert could accomplish by hand. It makes the prettiest finish for almost anything that must be hemmed at all and is really not a bit more work after the threads are drawn than to put in a plain hem. It is a pleasure to have one's best sheets, pillowcases and underwear hemstitched when it can be done without the tedious trial to the eyesight and the nerves that the handwork does.

To do it draw the threads and baste the hem over almost to the top of the drawn threads. Use a very fine needle, have both upper and lower tensions unusually tight and the stitch of medium length. Then stitch just as near the edge of the hem as possible. Remove bastings and draw the hem carefully down to the bottom of the drawn tucks. Hemstitched tucks are made exactly in the same way. If, however, you wish to do the work by hand after the threads are drawn and the hems basted run it through the machine as close to the edge of the hem as you can without having the needle threaded. The result is a row of perforations very easy to follow, and your work will be perfectly even without the labor of counting stitches.

Skirt Hanging Made Easy.

To turn up evenly the bottom of a skirt for hemming try this method: Place the end of a yardstick on the floor close to the skirt and at the top of the stick place a pin in the skirt. Move the yardstick little by little around the body, placing a pin in skirt at top edge of stick each time it is set on the floor. After going thus all around the skirt lay it on a bed and place one end of the yardstick at the line of pins, and at the lower part of the skirt place a pin as far from the end of yardstick as desired around in this manner, then turn the hem at new line of pins and baste it. This method insures a perfect hanging skirt and makes it possible to hang a skirt on one's own person unaided and without difficulty.—National Magazine.

ANNOUNCEMENT CARDS.

Must Be Sent to Acquaintances, "At Home" Cards Only to Friends.

Girls who are married quietly should be particular to send many announcement cards. To say that these engraved forms should be sent broadcast is none too strong, for to omit a person is equivalent to saying that one does not care to acknowledge his or her existence, and they differ from invitations in that to send one is not tantamount to a request to continue the acquaintance. But if there is the slightest doubt as to whether or not a person is to be remembered by an announcement it would be better to err on the side of commission than omission.

The inclosure of an "at home" card becomes a direct request for the person's acquaintance, and in my opinion such cards are important with announcements. There is always more or less speculation as to the reasons or details of a small wedding when the persons married have a large list of acquaintances, and unless there are "at home" cards the newly married couple are not definitely located in the minds of their friends. Nothing definite is expected of the prospective hostess, because no definite days need be set. It is enough that the card shall read, "At home after November first," for instance. The address then follows.

There are slight changes in the forms for announcements. Those who care for the most elaborate choose a kind wherein the recipient's name is written, as in some wedding invitations. This means much extra work and is not better form than the usual one that omits it.

Also as in invitations the announcements may be made in the name of the bride's parents or her nearest relative—for example:

"Mr. and Mrs. James Brown Smith" may "announce the marriage of their daughter Laura to Mr. Charles Evans Jones," the place and date following.

They are sent out precisely as are invitations. There are two envelopes, and the name of a young girl may be put on that of the parents. The cards must be addressed and stamped to be posted immediately after the ceremony. It is a great mistake to have any delay in getting them out.

Incidentally one may say to a business girl that it is a courteous act to send an announcement, but not an "at home" to her former employer, and whether or not she has ever seen the wife, if he is married, her name should be included. It is never good form to send a married man a card of any sort without also one to his wife.

Have on hand plenty of boiling water, washing soda and a good disinfectant to wash all toilet utensils and to pour down drains.

A good cleanser for hard wood is to wash it with a clean flannel wet in turpentine and rub lightly afterward with boiled linseed oil.

Most modern brassware is lacquered and needs only to be wiped off with a damp cloth. Work quickly and do not let the surfaces get wet.

Paint the inside woodwork of bedsteads with corrosive sublimate and turpentine, 5 cents' worth of the former to a pint of the latter.

Bric-a-brac should be carefully dusted before being washed in hot borax water or soapsuds in which a little ammonia has been dissolved.

To clean gilt try touching it up a little at a time with a camel's hair brush dipped in alcohol. Do not let it dry, but rub off with flannel, which should be changed frequently.

Unlacquered brass, if not rubbed up with one of the good patented brass polishes, can be washed in warm soapsuds, then rubbed with salt and vinegar put on with a piece of flannel. Lastly, polish with dry whiting.

THE CENTAUR COMPANY, NEW YORK CITY.

A Costly Client.

Miss Bayley told me that Mr Phipps the oculist, told a gentleman, who told her, the following anecdote of the late Duchess of Devonshire: Mr. Phipps was sent for to Chatsworth to operate upon the duchess' eye. He stayed there some time and at parting received from the duke a fee of £1,000. Just before he stepped into his carriage a message from the duchess brought him to her chamber. She hoped the duke had done what was handsome by Mr. Phipps. The gentleman protested:

"Yes, and more than handsome."

"It is an awful thing," continued her grace, "to ask, but really I am at this moment in immediate want of such a sum, and if you could, Mr. Phipps."

What could the oculist do? He produced his £1,000, took his leave and never heard of his money from that day to this.—From "Recollections of a Long Life," by Lord Broughton (John Cam Hobhouse).

Shakespeare's House.

The house in which the master bard was born is located in Henley street, Stratford-on-Avon, England. Washington Irving said of this famous abode of genius: "It is a small, mean looking edifice of wood and plaster, a true nestling place of genius, which seems to delight in hatching its offspring in by-corners. The walls of its squalid chambers are covered with names and inscriptions in every language by pilgrims of all nations, ranks and conditions, from the prince to the peasant, and present a simple but striking instance of the spontaneous and universal homage of mankind to the great poet of nature."

Several years ago the house was purchased by subscription with a view to the careful preservation of it and of its contents for the inspection of future generations.

Tuning a Bell.

No matter how great may be the care taken in making the mold, a bell has to be tuned before it will ring a clear, true note. As a matter of fact, every bell sounds five notes, all of which must blend together harmoniously. If one is the least bit out the tone will be spoiled. The first of these notes is produced by the vibrations at the mouth of the bell, the second by the vibrations a little higher up, the third still higher up, and so on to the fifth, which is produced quite near the top. As the character of the sound which rings depends upon the thickness of the metal, it is possible, by taking thin shavings from various places in the inside of the bell, to alter the five notes until they are all in harmony.

Name to Fit the Trade.

Old newspapers give us many instances of men's names fitting their callings. Thus we have Last, a shoemaker of Exeter, and Treadway, who plied the same trade in Hammersmith. There was a Bristol schoolmaster named Rod. Dodge and Wynne, attorneys at law of Liverpool, must have been the butts of their fellow townsmen, while few could have a more appropriate name than the Primitive Methodist preacher River Jordan.—London Chronicle.

No Escape Via Temperament.

"Mabel is getting past the marriageable age, isn't she?"

"Yes, and it's too bad she hasn't any talents."

"Why?"

"She won't be able to tell her friends that temperament prompts her to give up matrimony and devote herself to art."—St. Louis Star.

Thousands Have Kidney Trouble and Never Suspect It.

How To Find Out.

Fill a bottle or common glass with your water and let it stand twenty-four hours; a brick dust sediment, or settling, stringy or milky appearance often indicates an unhealthy condition of the kidneys; too frequent desire to pass it or pain in the back are also symptoms that tell you the kidneys and bladder are out of order and need attention.

What To Do.

There is comfort in the knowledge so often expressed, that Dr. Kilmer's Swamp-Root, the great kidney remedy, fulfills almost every wish in correcting rheumatism, pain in the back, kidneys, liver, bladder and every part of the urinary passage. Corrects inability to hold water and scalding pain in passing it, or bad effects following use of liquor, wine or beer, and overcomes that unpleasant necessity of being compelled to go often through the day, and to get up many times during the night. The mild and immediate effect of Swamp-Root is soon realized. It stands the highest because of its remarkable health restoring properties. If you need a medicine you should have the best. Sold by druggists in fifty-cent and one-dollar sizes.

Home of Swamp-Root.

You may have a sample bottle sent free by mail. Address Dr. Kilmer & Co., Binghamton, N. Y. Mention this paper and remember the name, Dr. Kilmer's Swamp-Root, and the address, Binghamton, N. Y., on every bottle.

John Bathurst and son, Thomas, killed a four-pronged buck during the season but while away from their camp some one stole it.

David Robb and Thomas Lingle returned empty handed.

The Lingle-Berryhill crowd failed to bring in deer for the first time in eight years.

The Kunes-Heverly crowd camped at the Metzgar fields and killed over one hundred rabbits.

The Clark party returned empty handed and say they never got to see a deer of any kind.

The Bulfock camp, of Beech Creek, failed to kill any deer.

It seems to be the consensus of opinion in this vicinity that game is exceedingly scarce, that it is growing scarcer every year and will soon be totally annihilated by the many persons who annually come from a distance to this section, lured here by the glowing accounts of the city newspapers during the summer months.

In the evening the various sections come together for addresses by gentlemen of national reputation. The evening program for this winter provides for illustrated lectures by Professor W. I. Spillman, of Washington, Professor C. G. Williams, of Ohio, Mr. B. D. White of Washington, Professor R. L. Watts, of State College, and others. One evening will be devoted largely to an address by D. Ward King, the road expert. Other persons of note appear on the evening programs. All lectures are free.

Reduced rates to State College for Farmers' Week have been granted by all railroads in the Trunk Line Association. The rate is two cents per mile in each direction from points in Pennsylvania. Tickets will be sold to Lemont, or Bellefonte, or Williamsport. The reduction is an open one and it will not be necessary to secure orders for tickets. Simply ask your railway agent for tickets at the reduced rate. The program for Farmers' Week is now ready. Send a postal card to Alva Agee, State College, Pa., for a copy. It will give you information concerning the lectures to be given each day of Farmers' Week.

The Chinese Burglar.

"The Chinese burglar is the most difficult to nab," declared Lecoq, the detective. "I might say he is impossible to nab. When this yellow scoundrel goes burgling he goes naked and covered with oil, and thus he is as slippery as an eel. But, you say, why not nab him by the pigtail, hey? The answer to that is that his pigtail is done up in a knot on top of his head and stuck full of needles and hatpins with the points turned outward. You often see a Chinaman in Pekin or Shanghai with his clothes stained with oil and with tiny red pricks all over him. He's been having trouble with a burglar."

Vegetable Suspension Bridge.

A remarkable suspension bridge spans the river Apurnmac in central Peru. The ropes of this bridge are composed of pliable roots and vines, while the planks are made of branches. In the humid climate of Peru it would be by no means extraordinary if this vegetable bridge were one day to start growing.—Wide World Magzaine.

The Court's Double.

"You say it was your 'double' that stole the chickens?"

"Yassuh."

"You know I gave you thirty days once for chicken stealing?"

"Ah remembah, suh."

"Well, this time you get sixty. That's the court's double."—Philadelphia Ledger.

Practical Considerations.

"My family tree"— began the titled suitor.

"I'm tired of hearing about family trees," answered Mr. Cumrox. "In the part of the country I came from a man's industry and consequence are measured by the size of the family wood piles."—Washington Star.

LOVE FOR TITLES.

The Way the Average German Burger Lengthens His Name.

The average German burgher's love of titles is a source of never ending fun to the rest of the German population and of continual ridicule to the rest of the world. Any one caring to see how far some people of the fatherland will go in this direction need only have a look at a hotel register at a summer resort. He will see added to the name of the guest the most curious combinations of appellations drawn together to form a title. He will, for instance, find:

A "Technischen Provinzialfeuersozietatsinspector" (a technical provincial fire insurance inspector).

A "Geheimen Expedierenden Sekretar im Ministerium der Offentlichen Arbeiten" (meaning a special sort of secretary at the ministry of public works).

A—to continue in English as well as possible—"cashier president of the Royal Saxon railway," a "royal railroad subsecretary."

The ladies are not better. "Frau Verwittwetobersteuercontrolleurin" is quite usual and means "Mrs. Widowed Supertax Collector." Then there are the "Mrs. Secretary and Calculator" and "Mrs. Widowed General Agent." The best of all, however, is a title which a lady entered in the register of a hotel at which I recently stayed. It read, "Mrs. Prison Warder and Children."—Pall Mall Gazette.

TAMING A BIRD.

Teaching a Feathered Pet to Trust You Is Not Difficult.

No creature is more jealous or sensitive than a bird. It is easy, however, to win the heart of almost any bird, and that without starving him or making him think he has mastered you. Simply talk to him a good deal.

Place his cage near you on your desk or work table, and retain his choicest dainty to give to him with your own fingers. Let him know that he can never have that particular thing unless he takes it from you, and he will soon learn, if you are patient and do not disconcert him by fixing your eyes upon him.

After this he will more readily take it from your lips, and then when you let him out of his cage, after the first excitement is over, he will come to you, especially if you have a call to which you have accustomed him, and accept the dainty from you while free.

As soon as he becomes really convinced that you will not hurt him or try to catch him or interfere in any way with his liberty he will give way to his boundless curiosity about you. He will pull your hair, pick at your eyes and give you as much of his company as you desire.—New York Press.

A Lost Opportunity.

The father of the late Benoit Constant Coquelin, the great French actor, was a baker, and young Coquelin was brought up to the trade. At thirteen, a writer in Le Figaro says, he manifested an irresistible inclination toward the stage, an inclination which his father steadfastly strove to repress.

"Don't devote so much time to those dramas," his father used to say. "You have learned a good trade, the business is running well, and you shall be my successor."

A number of years after Constant had made his way into general favor his father, who took pride in his boy's success, but could never quite get over the feeling that Constant should have been a baker, was congratulated upon his son's eminence.

"I remember," said the old man, "that Constant was a good baker. He would have gone far in the trade."

Blowing Up the Locks.

Would it be easy to blow up and destroy a lock canal by the malicious use of dynamite or other high explosive? The question has been debated much in connection with the Panama canal. The Engineering News calls attention to the fact that an attempt made in 1900 to wreck the Welland canal in this way produced surprisingly small results. After two weeks' examination the two men concerned selected lock 24, and each lowered a satchel containing dynamite and a fuss to the water behind the gate at each end of the lock. Both charges were exploded, but the dynamite failed to carry away the gates. Although the explosives blew a hole about a foot in diameter through each gate and loosened the hinges, the gates remained in position, holding back the water.

In the Regular Establishment.

"Yes," said the fresh young lieutenant, "the army has fallen on evil days."

The sophisticated captain merely gasped.

"Why," the F. Y. L. went on, "look at the names on this roll—Private Entrance, Corporal Punishment, Major Domo, General Housework. What kind of a"—

"You say the defendant pulled the plaintiff's hair. Now, how could the defendant, who is an unusually short man, reach the plaintiff's hair, the plaintiff being fully six feet tall?"

"Why, you see, your honor, the plaintiff was butting him at the time." —Cleveland Plain Dealer.

HOW TO DISTINGUISH AND CURE FAVUS AND CHICKEN POX.

Favus (white comb) and chicken pox and their difference should be known, for ignorance or error may result in an epidemic among fowls and communication of these diseases to people.

They are very different. Favus, caused by a parasite, starts on the head with tiny dislike warts, expands into powdery crusts that overtop raw surfaces, cover the body and destroy plumage. The thick, scaly crusts smell like moldy cheese, and the strongest fowl succumb.

TREATMENT FOR FAVUS.

Quarantine victims and disinfect thoroughly. Soften crusts with vase-line, remove gently and apply iodine and try to localize disease.

FAVUS.

In extreme cases apply ointment composed of one part red oxide mercury and six of vaseline.

Favus has been cured by dipping fowls in strong tobacco water.

Chicken pox often starts with swollen eye; then comes a wart on eyelid and, if not localized, the yellow topped warts spread over head, comb, wattles and sometimes on shanks, but not on feathered surface except with pigeons.

The wart first has a red, spongy undersurface, but as it dries up the black scab shows white roots.

Old stock is seldom affected except when protozoa enters wounds. Tender, young fowls are special victims and, combined with canker, it is hard to cure.

Like favus, it is contagious, the protozoa multiplying in damp, dirty poultry houses and pigeon lofts, and though very vigorous fowls sometimes recover without treatment victims must generally be doctored carefully.

TREATMENT FOR CHICKEN POX.

Quarantine victims and disinfect quarters. Touch warts with hydrogen-peroxide, then apply phenol sodique or apply solution of glycerin and 5 per cent carbolic acid. In extreme cases use solution of iodine and 10 per cent carbolic.

CHICKEN POX.

When combined with canker, remove cheesy patches and apply peroxide.

Keep victims of favus and pox in warm, dry place.

DON'TS.

Don't heat your poultry house. It makes fowls tender and wastes legal tender.

Don't bother heating the drinking water; it's unnecessary. Warm water freezes sooner than fresh.

Don't keep fowls where water freezes solid. They will eat, but neither lay nor pay.

Don't let your fowls eat snow for water. Blood heat used to melt snow cuts the egg record low.

Don't bother feeding hot mash. It's much trouble and brings no more cash.

Don't let that leak remain in the roof and cause wet, frozen litter. A little putty often prevents a big fowl funeral.

Don't set the drink vessel where litter is scratched into it. Set on an elevation preserves sanitation.

Don't feed all corn; it's a fat producer. And don't feed musty grain; it's a flock reducer.

STENOGRAPHERS' NOTES.

Perfectly Intelligible Only to the One Who Wrote Them.

"My stenographer was taken ill suddenly," said a well known business man the other day, "and as I had dictated some important letters to him which I wanted written at once I took his notebook to a stenographic institution and asked for a man to translate the notes. Judge of my surprise when I was informed that no matter how good an expert a stenographer may be he cannot read the notes of a colleague."

"This is a common complaint of men who know nothing of stenography and have never studied it," said a shorthand reporter recently. "It is true, however, that no stenographer can accurately translate another's notes. This does appear strange, but it must be remembered that stenography is by no means a perfect science. In fact, it is most imperfect, and there is great room for improvement. Therefore every intelligent person who studies stenography after he gets through the rudiments of it begins to improve it in his own way, invents word signs and characters and changes or alters those he has learned. As a result every stenographer's notes are stamped by his own individuality, a mystery to another, and therefore, with the exception of words most commonly used, it would be impossible to read another's notes accurately.—New York Herald.

EYE OF THE CAMERA.

The Longer It Looks the More It Sees Within Certain Limits.

Often the eye of the camera will decipher documents of which the writing had been substantially obliterated by age, says a writer in Van Norden's Magazine. I have successfully copied with the camera the utterly faded photograph of a classmate of, forty years previous.

Changes in the pigment of the skin, undiscovered by the eye, appear with distinctness on the sensitive plate, and it is said that ample warning of approaching disease has been thereby given.

The camera takes pictures of subjects which cannot be made to appear on the ground glass and of those which the eye of man has never seen. The human eye can penetrate space no farther in an hour than in a single instant. Yet the eye of the camera will gaze into the sky for hours, looking deeper and seeking more with each second that passes.

Through this attribute of the camera a great chart of the heavens is now being made. In this work distinguished astronomers and photographers throughout the world are co-operating. Yet not one in a hundred of the stars already plainly pictured by them was ever seen by the unaided eye of scientists.

A Verbal Speedometer.

Every calling has its technical vocabulary, and those who are familiar with it are often surprised and irritated at the difficulty other people have in understanding it. A writer in the New York World tells of an old horseman in Maine who had run over a man and was being sued for damages.

The court asked the defendant if he was driving fast. He answered, "I was going a pace." The court then said, "Now, kindly tell the gentlemen of the jury just how fast you were going."

"Well," said the defendant, "I reckon I was going a clip."

"Well, will you tell the jury how fast a clip is?"

"Well, it's going a dite."

"Now, will you tell the jury how fast a dite is?"

"Well, a dite's a dite. Anybody knows what a dite is."

Which Leg?

In a small town in the west of Scotland the town clerk, who was a bit of a "character," had the misfortune to lose his leg in a railway accident. As a mark of appreciation and esteem for his long services the council unanimously agreed to replace his loss with an artificial limb, which they did as soon as he was sufficiently recovered. A few months afterward the town clerk, who was generally known by his Christian name, Paul, was unfortunate enough to have his other leg fractured in an accident. Naturally the mishap became food for town gossip, and one old wife in discussing the matter with a neighbor was overheard saying:

"It's a gey bad business for Paul, puir man, but is't his ain leg or the leg that belangs to the toon that's broken?"

Life of the Red Deer.

According to an old Gaelic legend, a red deer might live for 210 years, an eagle for 630 and an oak tree for nearly nineteen centuries. Nowadays, however, hundred-year-old deer would be difficult to find. From twenty-five to thirty-five years apparently may be about the range of their existence.—London Country Gentleman.

Wanted It to Take.

Mrs. B. believed in infant baptism, but for some reason that rite was not performed for Tommy till he was some four or five years old. While the ceremony was in progress the mother was very much gratified with Tommy's behavior. He seemed duly impressed with the solemnity of the occasion and remained with bowed head for some time after the sprinkling had been done.

"The angel!" exclaimed the mother.

"The little dear!" said a good sister as she went up to give him a "God bless you" and a pat on the head. But just as her hand was descending with that benediction a very wrathful and unangelic countenance was turned upon her, a pugilistic little fist delivered a paralyzing blow on her biceps, and the indignant Tommy exclaimed, "You git away from here!"

Of course he was led out in disgrace and questioned by his horrified mother.

"Why, don't you know she would 'a' rubbed all the baptizing water off before it would 'a' had time to soak in?" explained Tommy, who from his point of view was fully justified.—Los Angeles Times.

Buffoonery in "Hamlet."

The buffoonery once tolerated in provincial theaters is illustrated in an anecdote set forth in the memoirs of Barry Sullivan. Wright, who was the first gravedigger, prepared himself to take the house by storm by having incased his person within a dozen or more waistcoats of all sorts of shapes and patterns. When about to commence the operation of digging the grave for the fair Ophelia Wright began to unwind by taking off waistcoat after waistcoat, which caused uproarious laughter among the audience. But as fast as he relieved himself of one waistcoat Paul Bedford, the second gravedigger, incased himself in the castoff vests, which increased the salvos of laughter, for as Wright was getting thinner Paul grew fatter and fatter. Wright, seeing himself outdone, kept on the remainder of the waistcoats and went on with his part quite crestfallen.

An Awkward Selection.

The first Baron Kenyon was rather fond of telling the story of how while on circuit with Justice Rook they entered a village just in time to accompany the population to the little village church. The parish clerk, anxious to have the congregation show due appreciation of the honor conferred by the presence of the distinguished jurists, gave out two verses of one of the metrical psalms: "Speak, O ye judges of the earth, if just your sentence be, or must not innocence appeal to heaven from your decree? Your wicked hearts and judgments are alike by malice swayed, your griping hands by mighty bribes to violence betrayed."

By this time most of the adults had woke up to the application of the psalm and remained silent, allowing the children to continue the second verse.—London Tatler.

A Soft Answer.

Jewel—Arrah, Jimmy, why did I marry ye? Just tell me that, for it's meself that's had to maintain ye ever since the blessed day that I became your wife.

"Swate jewel," replied Jimmy, not relishing the charge, "and it's meself that hopes I may live to see the day when you're a widow weeping over the cold sod that covers me. Then I'll see how you'll get along without me, honey."—London Tit-Bits.

Needed Repairs.

"Does your typewriter need repairs?" asked the meandering tinker as he entered the office.

"It would seem so," replied the employer. "She has just gone across the street to consult a dentist."

More Modern.

"Tommy, you have written this sentence, 'The pen is mightier as the sword,' and it is incorrect. How should it be changed?"

"Pen ought to be changed to typewriter, ma'am."—Chicago Tribune.

He'd Had Experience.

PEANUT OIL PROFITS FOR TEXAS FARMERS

Get Big Prices for Goobers in Lone Star State.

SELL FOR $1 A BUSHEL

Peanut Hay Regarded as Equal to Alfalfa for all Purposes and Commands $15 a Ton—Value in Peanut Hulls for Feeding Cattle and Hogs.

Farmers in the sandy land section of Tarrant County, Texas, are turning to the humble peanut as their surest and most profitable crop and the staunchest ally in their revolt against King Cotton's tyranny. The acreage in peanuts will be multiplied perhaps tenfold in Tarrant County next year. "There's a reason." In fact, there are many reasons, says the St. Louis "Globe Democrat."

H. D. Stevens, manager of the Mansfield Cotton Oil Company, of Mansfield, last year offered to guarantee to all farmers planting peanuts in marketable quantities not less than 65 cents a bushel for their crop. Farmers who took his advice are selling their peanuts for over a dollar a bushel. He makes the same offer for next year's crop.

The enormous demand for peanuts in this county may be appreciated when it is known that, notwithstanding the plant is grown in every state in the Union, last year the United States was forced to import 2,000,000 bushels.

In view of these figures, Mr. Stevens declares that there is no possibility of the market being glutted. Besides, he sees in the new uses of peanuts a growth in the demand which will more than overcome any possible increase in the production.

Mr. Stevens calls the peanut the universal plant, because it supplies food to every form of bird and beast as well as for man. He believes that the greatest development of the peanut industry will come from the introduction of peanut oil as a preservative and in cooking. The big packing houses, which use large quantities of peanut oil in putting up the finer grade of canned meats, are forced to import all their oil from abroad, as peanut oil is not manufactured in quantities in the United States.

Only two oil mills in the United States so far as known, have ever experimented in the manufacture of peanut oil, and these were the Stevens mill at Mansfield and Shreveport, La.

Mr. Stevens found that any cold press mill can manufacture peanut oil without extra expense and equipment. He found that one bushel of peanuts, or thirty pounds, will produce a gallon of oil. It requires 60 pounds of cotton seed to produce a gallon of oil. Goosen and Rosen of Rotterdam, Holland, the largest foreign manufacturers in vegetable oils and by-products, wrote Mr. Stevens that peanut oil is worth just 6 per cent less than double the value of cottonseed oil. The Mansfield mill manufactured perhaps 20 gallons of peanut oil and refined it. The refined product is almost odorless, is nearly clear, and tastes only slightly of the peanut.

He distributed small quantities of this oil among several families who were known as "good livers," fond of good cooking. They tried the peanut oil in breadmaking, in cooking meats and as a salad dressing. Those who tried the peanut oil wanted more. They declared that it was superior to lard in bread-making and superior to olive oil as a salad dressing. But the supply, naturally, was exhausted.

Mr. Stevens expected to manufacture peanut oil in his mill this year, but in spite of his campaign for large acreage in peanut and a promise to pay not less than 65 cents for every bushel of peanuts raised, only 1800 acres of peanuts were planted in the Mansfield community. Much of this area was in too small patches for the farmers to consider from a commercial standpoint, and in many cases the farmers just plowed up their peanut field and baled the crop, nuts and all.

The peanut cake, the by-product remaining after the oil is pressed out, analyzes 20 per cent higher in food value than cotton-seed cake. While cotton-seed cake is only valuable for cattle feed peanut cake is eaten by the cows, horses, hogs and chickens with equally beneficial results.

Even the peanut hulls, ground fine, according to Government Horticulturalist Beatty, analyze equal in food valeu to the wheat bran and are excellent feed for cattle, or, soaked, for hogs and pigs.

Peanut hay is equal to alfalfa for all purposes and commands a good price on the market. This year it sells readily for $15 a ton.

Peanuts require little labor. They are plowed close, and one does not need to cultivate them with a hoe. The farmers are at little expense for labor. Another advantage in peanut culture lies in the fact that the plant is drought resisting. Most of their substance is drawn from the air and the land is not impoverished, but, on the contrary, is built up. Land about Mansfield that did not produce a bushel of corn an acre this year yields twenty-five bushels an acre of peanuts, and land that will not produce a quarter of a bale of cotton on an average year will yield forty bushels of peanuts.

WINDOW GAZING.

A Fascinating Occupation For the Tourist In Paris.

Window gazing is one of the recognized vocations of the tourist in Paris. Everybody engages in this fascinating occupation, and, in truth, it would be impossible to resist the temptation, for the most beautiful wares are set forth in the most artistic manner, and the only way you can withstand the desire for possession is to leave the coin of the realm and even your letter of credit at home; otherwise there is no telling into what extravagance, not to say useless purchase, you may be persuaded when probably you have just gone out for a morning stroll.

Of all these windows the jewelers' seem to be the greatest magnets. But the bewildering part of it is that to the man or woman unversed in the knowledge of precious stones the imitations thereof look quite as good as the genuine articles. Pearls, diamonds, rubies, emeralds and so throughout the long list stones are so perfectly imitated that it is small wonder many American women succumb to the temptation of buying them. But there the temptation does not end, for they bring them home with all the intent to dazzle, bewilder and deceive their unsuspecting relatives and friends with the magnificence of their suddenly acquired wealth of jewels. Women whom one would never suspect of wearing imitation gems frequent the shops where they are for sale in Paris in the most open, not to say brazen, manner, while the foreign papers fairly bristle with advertisements of reconstructed and imitation gems, which only goes to show what a lucrative business it must be.—New York Tribune.

AN OLD BUSYBODY.

What the Bridegroom Thought of the Old Native at the Station.

While waiting for the train the bride and bridegroom walked slowly up and down the platform.

"I don't know what this joking and guying may have been to you," he remarked, "but it's death to me. I never experienced such an ordeal."

"It's perfectly dreadful," she answered. "I shall be so glad when we get away from everybody we know."

"They're actually impertinent," he went on. "Why, the very natives"—

At this unpropitious moment the wheezy old station master walked up to them.

"Be you goin' to take this train?" he asked.

"It's none of your business," retorted the bridegroom indignantly as he guided the bride up the platform, where they condoled with each other over the impertinence of some of the natives.

Onward came the train, its vapor curling from afar. It was the last to their destination that day—an express. Nearer and nearer it came at full speed; then in a moment it whizzed past and was gone.

"Why in thunder didn't that train stop?" yelled the bridegroom.

"Cos you sed 'twarn't none of my business. I has to signal if that train's to stop."

And as the old station master softly stroked his beard there was a wicked twinkle in his eye.—London Tit-Bits.

He Was Acting.

Stephen Phillips, the dramatist and poet, began life as a member of F. R. Benson's repertoire company. An amusing story is told of his debut. Mr. Benson had told him that the great thing for an actor is to act. "It does not matter," he continued, "so much what the words are which the actor speaks as the impression which he conveys to the audience by those words." Then he gave Mr. Phillips the part of Balthazar in "Romeo and Juliet." On the first night Balthazar managed the first line of his part and then forgot the rest. Romeo, in the person of Mr. Benson, had to go to his assistance and speak the rest of the part for him, while Balthazar exhibited an agony of speechless grief. "What do you mean," Mr. Benson afterward demanded, "by going on the stage without knowing your part?" "I was only doing what you told me. You said the great thing on the stage was not so much the words you speak as to act. Well, I was acting."—London Tit-Bits.

Tact.

"I am sorry to have to tell you so, boys," said the pleasent looking visitor who was addressing the Sunday school, "but there is not one chance in a thousand that any one of you ever will be president of the United States."

Still he failed to secure their undivided attention.

"But if you live up to your opportunities," he went on, eying them keenly, "some bright boy in this audience may become a great baseball pitcher or the world's champion batsman."

Instantly every boy sat up straight and began to listen.—Chicago Tribune.

Too Full.

A man very much intoxicated was taken to the police station.

"Why did you not bail him out?" inquired a bystander of a friend.

"Bail him out!" exclaimed the other. "Why, you couldn't pump him out!"

Allowances.

"Of course I admit your son is extravagant. But you must make allowances; he's young."

"That's all right! But the more allowances I make the quicker he blows 'em."—Judge.

AN UP TO DATE SANTA CLAUS

By SUSAN BROWN ROBBINS.

PAUL FLETCHER was in the drawing room waiting for Lida to come. Lida lived with her brother, and every time Fletcher called to see her either the brother's wife or his children were in the room, so there was never a chance to say anything to her alone.

At last, however, his opportunity had come. It was the day before Christmas, and Mrs. Safford and the children had gone to her mother's for several days.

Now, with Lida left at home with the two servants and her brother not coming till evening, Fletcher could say to her those things he had been longing to say, but which he could not bring himself to write in a letter nor to declare before the assembled family.

At length, after what seemed a very long waiting, some one was coming. He stood up and looked eagerly toward the doorway. The portiere was thrust aside, and in walked Teddy—Teddy, who, in Fletcher's opinion, was the worst pill in the whole box as far as staying power and keen observation were concerned.

"Hello, Teddy," he said, not very cordially. "I thought you had gone to spend Christmas with your grandma."

"I didn't go," said Teddy.

"Do you expect a visit from Santa Claus tonight?"

"Oh, I s'pose so," wearily. "I'd just like to see him, though!" His manner grew more animated.

"Why, what would you do?"

"I'd tell him what I think of him."

"And what is that?"

"Oh, that I think he's a fraud! Pretending he comes in a sleigh when the ground has been bare for a month! And reindeers too! Who does he think is going to believe that? Why doesn't he come on a bicycle?"

"His fur overcoat would be rather in the way," said Fletcher gravely. "And he's pretty old, too, and maybe does not know how to ride, and, besides, how would he bring the presents?"

"What's the use of presents, anyway? I never have anything that's any good."

"I think you have the blues today," said Fletcher, and then he did not speak again, though Teddy tried to draw him out.

He seemed to be in a brown study, and nothing roused him till Lida came in, and even then he did not say much and stayed only a short time.

It was in the evening that a card was brought to Teddy. On it was written "Santa Claus." Teddy's eyes sparkled. "Tell him to come in," he said grandly.

A moment later Santa Claus stood before him, a tall, fur clad figure with flowing hair and beard. Teddy shook hands and introduced the guest to his aunt.

"Did you find it good sleighing?" Teddy asked. "And how are the reindeers?"

"I did not come on runners, young man," said Santa Claus. "Perhaps you did not know that there is no snow on the ground."

"Bicycle?" asked Teddy.

"No; I came in a motor carriage."

"A motor carriage!" cried Teddy incredulously. Then he ran to the window and looked out. "It is, Aunt Lida," he said excitedly, coming back. "You can see it just as plain out under the electric light."

"I did not bring you any presents," said Santa Claus, "as I heard you did not care for them, but I would like to take you for a little ride, if your aunt will go too. I came early," glancing at the clock, "so that I can get back and attend to the boys and girls who like to have presents."

"Of course we will go," said Teddy promptly. "I have never been in a motor carriage."

In a few moments the three were on their way, well protected from the cold, bracing air by an abundance of furs and wraps. There was no moon, but after the lighted streets of the town were past the stars shone down on them brightly.

Teddy was wild with delight, and his tongue ran on rapidly. At length there were occasional pauses, then longer ones interrupted by disjointed remarks. Finally there was total silence. Fletcher bent over so that he could see the child's face; then he looked at Lida and smiled.

They went on for a little in silence. Fletcher was trying to compose his speech.

"I don't know how to say it," he burst out desperately at length. "I keep forgetting how I look, and if I say it the way I want to it will be perfectly ridiculous. And yet I must say it, for I may never have another chance."

She was looking at him, her startled eyes dark and luminous in the starlight.

"Perhaps you do not need to say it," she said gently.

"Do you mean that you understand without my telling you?" he asked eagerly.

"Yes," she answered very low.

When they reached the house Fletcher took Teddy in his arms and carried him in. He laid him gently on the couch in the hall and turned away, thinking the child still slept.

"I can stop only a moment," Fletcher said. "Is it late?"

At that instant Teddy sat bolt upright, staring about him wildly. He caught sight of his father in an adjoining room.

"Oh, papa!" he cried, his voice ringing out clear and shrill. "Oh, papa, Santa Claus is kissing Aunt Lida!"—Boston Herald.

Death Certificates For Dogs.

The veterinarian was bandaging the leg of a French poodle when the telephone rang, so he asked the visitor to take the message.

"Please tell the doctor," said a woman at the other end of the wire, "that King Charles is dead and we would like a death certificate right away."

The visitor transmitted the news of royalty demise, then added something about the "tomfoolery of getting a death certificate for a dog."

"It may be tomfoolery," said the veterinarian, "but a lot of people with pet cats and dogs are guilty of it. If a real King Charles was dead and I was making out a certificate to file with the board of health I should take no more pains than I shall for that family that has lost a dog. His age and the date of death will be recorded, and the disease that carried him off will be described in detail. Of course the owners of valuable animals are most likely to ask for death certificates, but very often the possessor of an ugly little cur that has crept into his affections wants one too."—New York Sun.

How to Hit.

With one swift, straight right to the jaw the little man had knocked the big, fat bully out completely. Now he was boasting modestly about the matter.

"I learned how to hit," he said, "from Gentleman Jim Corbett. Gentleman Jim claims that in street fighting if you land one clean right you win. But few men know how to hit out straight and clean. They swing. And a swing is no good because it can so easily be dodged.

"To hit out with the right straight and swift—this is how Jim taught me to do it. You step forward with your left foot toward the enemy. You hit straight out with your right arm as hard as you can, at the same time shoving your body forward and pushing off with the ball of your right foot as though you were going to shove the whole earth from under you.

"That is how to land a straight right. It is easy, and it wins every time."

Why He Gave Nothing.

"I've encountered many an excuse for 'sidestepping' the collection basket in church," remarked a Jersey commuter, "but the prize excuse came to me last Sunday out in our town. Next to me in church sat an acquaintance who had taken out a dollar bill, but when he saw the collector was a substitute for the regular brother he put the money back in his pocket. I taxed him with it good naturedly on the way out, and he was very frank.

"'You needn't publish it,' said he, 'but I know that man pretty well. Now, I happen to owe him $5, and he's dunning me unnecessarily for it. I know him so well that I know if I put that dollar bill in the basket he'd find a way to abstract it and pocket it as part of what I owe him. And he'd really feel he was justified too. That's the way he's built, don't you see.'"—New York Globe.

Rebuking a Greenhorn.

A whist expert discussed at a dinner those overconfident and foolish persons who think they can learn whist in a year or two.

"Such persons should be called to order," the expert said sternly. "I for one am always glad to see them called to order. A young greenhorn stood behind my partner during a game one night. At the end of the hand the greenhorn said:

"'Why didn't you lead hearts? That's what I'd have done.'

"My partner smiled and answered:

"'Ah, but you, my young friend, have the world before you and none but yourself to consider. You have no wife and family dependent on you for bread, and if you lose heavily no one suffers but yourself. With me it is different; hence I led spades.'"

Necessity of Air Baths.

The conditions and conventions of our civilization demand frequent bathing. Any one suspected of avoiding a daily bath would quickly find himself persona non grata in decent society. It is popularly supposed that frequent bathing is essential to health. This is quite untrue. Much of the benefit attributed to the water is in reality due to the complete exposure of the skin to the air. The respiratory function of the skin is of high importance, and, although water may be dispensed with, closing the pores to air would result in speedy asphyxiation.—New York Medical Journal.

Little Boy Blue, come blow your horn;
It you don't it won't be blown.
The people won't flock
To buy your stock
If you never make it known.

So, Little Boy Blue, come blow your horn;
It's the proper business caper,
And the very best way
To make it pay
Is to blow it through this paper.
